

STATEMENT

KENDRA WADSWORTH
1325 N 5TH STREET #1F
PHILADELPHIA, PA 19122

I have lived twenty-seven years and have experienced something new every day. On Saturday I sat on my orange plaid couch with my two dogs and drank coffee. My boyfriend was ill in bed so there was only one lamp on, it had a pink shade so the room had a warm glow. All of my paintings for this show were scattered around my apartment. I stared at them and had these thoughts.

Everything I need to know I learned in bible school. Eating cookies and drinking kool-aid is healthy.

Somebody walked on water and Jesus rose from the dead on Easter so the rabbit is important.

Nasty men like to take advantage of little girls. They think their tools make them macho.

Everybody always wants to be the winner. When is it time to say goodbye?

Land is more important than religion. That's why John Deere invented a tractor.

On Valentine's Day you're supposed to show me how you love me.

Who was that lady that pasted herself with color and thought that made her more attractive?