

A THOUSAND MILES

In my work, certain commonplace objects function as metaphors for psychological and emotional states. These objects have real or implied interiors. The frame through which the viewer accesses the interior is a crucial formal and perceptual element. I am interested in the tension a lens affords between intimacy and distance. This tension also surfaces in response to questions of memory and culture.

-Mark Shetabi